

POLITICAL SCIENCE | BACHELOR OF SCIENCE IN POLITICAL SCIENCE

Program Summary

Code	Title	Hours
General Education		34
Cognate		12
BS Science Requirement		4
Program (Major) Core		22
Concentration Core		12
Open Electives ¹		36
Total Hours		120

¹ Open electives are the credit hours required to reach a minimum of 120 total hours and 45 upper-level hours. The number listed assumes all courses are completed at FHSU as listed. This number may vary if students transfer courses, or have individual substitutions allowed.

Students should speak with their advisor if either situation applies to determine if the number will vary, and to ensure they enroll in a minimum of 45 upper-level hours.

Students entering within 1 year of high school graduation will take UNIV 101 Freshman Seminar and may apply that hour in the open elective category.

Program Requirements

General Education

All undergraduate degrees require completion of the Kansas Systemwide General Education (<https://catalog.fhsu.edu/general-education/>).

Courses identified with ^{GE} on this page may satisfy a general education requirement in addition to the identified degree requirement. Students who apply a degree requirement to satisfy a general education requirement will typically add an equal number of hours to the the university elective category. This flexibility may allow you to complete a minor or certificate within the 120 hour degree. Transfer students and students majoring in programs with approved exceptions (<https://www.fhsu.edu/general-education/documents/fhsu-gen-ed-transfer-exceptions-explainer1.pdf>) are especially encouraged to select these courses in completing General Education requirements to maximize the likelihood of completing the degree with 120 credit hours.

Concentration

In addition to the core students will select 12 hours from a concentration.

Open

Select one course from four different concentrations.

American Politics

The American Politics subfield gives students essential exposure to the institutions, actors, and processes in American government. This area of political science covers a broad range of behavioral and institutional accounts of electoral and campaign politics, the legislative process, political parties, executive power and bureaucracy, the policy process and administration of policy, public law, cultural politics, state and local government, political development over time, and political thought. Furthermore, the study of American politics is hardly confined to one government—50 state governments in a federalist system can act as experimental arenas in which policy is tested and evaluated.

Federalism is the idea that a national government shares power with sub-units of government. In the American case this means that the federal government in Washington DC does not have a monopoly on political power. 50 state governments have their own constitutional foundations, legislatures, executive branch (state governors), and state court systems. Furthermore, state governments must share power with local government entities, such as municipal or county-level governments. Federal, state, and local governments interact in complex ways that make the study and practice of politics in the United States a fascinating and challenging endeavor.

Studying institutions of American government gives FHSU students career readiness that positions them for rewarding careers in various layers of government, NGOs and non-profit organizations, and the private sector.

Democratic Engagement

In this track in FHSU's Political Science program, we aim to promote effective engagement in democratic life through the development of knowledge, skills, and attitudes necessary to foster the greater good. This track creates opportunities for personal and professional growth with a civic purpose more broadly and opens new space for collaboration within and outside the university. Political Science Programs pursue the service of the greater good for Fort Hays State University and the communities it serves

International Relations/Comparative Politics

Looking for a career with an international flair such as a position with the United Nations or State Department? Are you interested in better understanding international organizations, foreign policy concerns, and other issues in world politics?

The International Relations/Comparative Politics concentration grounds you in the study of international relations through the study of nations, states, intergovernmental organizations and multi-national corporations. Through theory and hands-on learning opportunities, the International Relations/Comparative Politics concentration equips you with invaluable research and analytical skills and helps you build a solid foundation for your success either in graduate school or in the international relations field.

Political Theory

In one sense, political theory is a subfield of the discipline of political science, existing alongside other branches of political inquiry such as comparative politics, international relations, and American politics. But in another sense, political theory seems quite unique from the other subfields in that it can be regarded as the oldest and most fundamental form of political inquiry. It is a philosophical inquiry into political meaning that lays bare the most fundamental questions of the human experience.

What does it mean for an individual to be free? Is reason necessary to freedom? What form of equality should society strive for? How does one wield power for the sake of justice?

Political theory, then, does not just stand beside other branches, but can be considered foundational to the discipline of political science—the fountainhead of all other forms of political inquiry. Indeed, what appears to lie beneath the practice of inquiry in the other subfields of political science are fundamental questions and insights that strike to the heart of what we call political theory. For these reasons, it is essential that students have some exposure to political theory in order to:

1. understand their own beliefs and ideological principles;
2. evaluate contemporary political debate by understanding foundational principles that influence specific policy proposals and political positions; and
3. articulate a sense of what justice, freedom, and equality are and how we should pursue these values in a democratic society.

Pre-Law

From pre-law courses to advising to co- and extra-curricular opportunities, the Pre-Law Program at FHSU will help you prepare for a career in law. Our rigorous academic curriculum will cultivate the skills, knowledge, values, and experiences necessary for success in law school and the legal profession. Advising resources and special programs will support your exploration of legal careers and completion of the law school application process.

For more information about law school preparation visit the pre-law page (<https://www.fhsu.edu/polisci/pre-law/>).

Public Administration

Studying Public Administration can ready you to become a public servant in a governmental agency at the federal, state, or local level. You can also work in think tanks, research institutes, or non-profit organizations to assist and influence government officials in policy-making.

Courses offered for the Public Administration concentration will introduce the basic theories, concepts, and practices in the field of public administration and policies. Students will gain an understanding of the political, legal, and social environment of public administration and will develop skills in policy analysis, personnel management, and public budgeting. With these skills, students are prepared for careers in a multitude of fields.

Academic Degree Maps are term-by-term sample course plans that specify milestones, courses, and special requirements that are necessary for facilitating on-time completion. Degree Maps are examples and are not prescriptive. Individualized choices such as concentration options, transfer credits, optional minors, advisory programs (certificates), etc. can alter the recommended coursework. Course offerings are subject to change. Students should consult with their academic advisors for additional guidance on course planning.

To determine courses to take in the directed choices (often listed as Program Elective Course) and directed elective course blocks see the overview tab for courses. To locate approved courses in General Education areas (Undergraduate Programs) see the general education section (<https://catalog.fhsu.edu/general-education/>) of the catalog.

The undergraduate course maps typically advise the most efficient route for students to complete the general education requirements. Courses that are required in the major may be listed as fulfilling relevant general education requirements. This will result in more open elective course hours in some maps than is listed on the degree overview page.
